

The European Academy of Caring Sciences is interested in promoting health and patient participation in care in the three sub-themes: Lifeworld-led Care, Transcultural Care and Public Health Care. www.EACS.nu

EACS invites researchers, doctoral students and others interested in discussing and reflecting on the development of knowledge in caring science

European Academy of Caring Science: 'Next generation of caring science'

Conference April 10th, 2013

Preben Hornung stuen, Stakladen, Nordre Ringgade,
University of Aarhus, Denmark

When healthcare services aim to help patients and relatives to cope with the changes illness causes - for a shorter or longer period - it must be based on values concerning our attitude towards the ill and the ways in which illness is perceived to impact life.

The challenge is; if and how this is possible in the 21st century healthcare system?

The future health care system creates a new communicative and relational reality with new types of communication, new health technology solutions, increasing use of social media, improved access to information and knowledge, increasing demands on involvement of patients and relatives, large complexity and short time where patients' needs must be identified as well as reorganisation of the healthcare system.

Furthermore accelerated patient pathways, early discharge, high expectations from patients and conversion of inpatient services to outpatient services will lead to an increased demand for care and caring capacities.
